In collaboration with Oxfam, the FPC is pleased to launch its latest pamphlet, Bio-Energy and CAP Reform: The Gains to Europe and Africa. The pamphlet argues that British politicians need to look seriously at how farm-produced energy can contribute not only to energy security, but also to meeting Britain's climate change targets and assisting rural development.

The seminar will explore the important spin-offs from increased British and European production of biomass energy:

- The capacity to support the energy needs of developing countries
- The potential to reduce dangerous emissions
- Reduction of the burdens on developing economies imposed by high oil prices

Speakers will include the authors of the pamphlet and a representative of Oxfam. The meeting will be chaired by Stephen Twigg, Director of the FPC.

RSVP (acceptances only) to Sam Vincent:
